Boys' Clothes If parents of boys could be sure of the clothes that they buy for their boys; if they could walk into a cloth-ing store with the same confidence they would walk into Tiffany's to buy they would walk into Tiffany's to buy jewels, wouldn't it be a pretty good thing for the parents—and for the store too? Well, there is that kind of a clothing store right here in town, where you can buy boys' clothes with the same confidence in their reliability that you would buy Tiffany diamonds. The store is at Main street and Fairfield avenue, and the name of Meigs & Co. is on the sign over this store. In fact, the store is in the Meigs & Co. building, and that building is built, every stone of it, of the confidence of the big buying public in Meigs & Co. clothing. Hundreds of the men who buy their clothing in this store today buy their clothing in this store today were boys once and wore Meigs & Co. clothing. The reliability of their clothing. The reliability of their clothing for boys has won a large share of their business today, and it is not surprising therefore, to find these same men buying clothes for their boys of the same store where they as boys were clothed.

Genuine Need for Extension of Barnum Avenue Line to Stratford.

Between 40 and 50 residents of Stratford and this city held a meeting last night in the Meigs building for the purpose of discussing ways and means of getting the electric car line service in Barnum avenue extended to Main street in Stratford. Thomas McQuillan of Stratford was chairman of the meeting. Interested parties showed a petition which bore the names of 400 property owners including those who already live where they would be bene-fitted by the new line and others who will not build on their lots until the car service is available.

A committee was appointed for the purpose of securing a hearing before the officers of the railroad company at which time the petition will be pre

At present there are several hun dred people living in Stratford at Hol-lister Heights, Nichols avenue, and the Broad Bridge road who are employed at the factories in this city. They walk to work in all kinds of weather as it is out of their way to take the Stratford avenue lines and cross the tracks of the steam railroad in doing

As they have walked the greater part of the distance to work when they reach the trolley terminal they con-tinue to walk the remainder of the way and the company misses a few hundred nickels each day that it would get if its lines were extended within a reasonable distance from the rapid-ly growing section east of the town line.

The citizens will meet again next Wednesday night to hear the report of the committee that is endeavoring to secure a hearing in New Haven.
